Blake Morrisey

      The people genuinely read my articles are my friends and family the link and if they share it with others. My web portfolio helps me expand my readers just beyond my close circle. Any viewers of my web portfolio can simply click on "BLOG" in the navigation bar. It takes them to the site where all my articles are posted to read. This makes sharing my articles easier than copy and pasting multiple links for different articles for those who want to read. It is also a more efficient and professional way of sharing with companies and business professionals. I also hoped to share my web portfolio with professionals, so I added my resume. Anyone can view my resume by clicking "RESUME", where my resume will be brought up. I said a little about me in the section on the home page to get to know me and what I do. I added a photo of myself to match the name to the face. I also added my contact information for those who have any questions or just want to contact me. I did not wish my web portfolio to be all plain and white, so I added a green border cause it's my favorite color and black lettering to stand out against the white. I also switched my style sheet to make the portfolio a little more personable. I did run into some technical difficulties as this was my first time coding a website. Still, I believe my web portfolio captures my goal of promoting myself and my articles.